Hi Dave and James

Sorry again about this morning. Still feeling really disappointed in myself.

Are we going to meet tomorrow and work some more on it?
Is there anything that I should do before then?

I am "free" (some of that will be spent on other things such as dinner) from 12 onwards.

Scott

Scott,

With a week left on this assignment, it's really unhelpful that you fail to do the work set, even with a day extension - which, really we don't have time for.

We're meeting tomorrow at 2 and yes, there's plenty you can work on before then; what would be really useful is a web interface - all the code me and James have done so far is in dropbox.

You're going to have to produce something, because it's not fair for the rest of us.

Dave

I know how unhelpful it is. I have been on the receiving end of what I have done to you guys, in the past. It wasn't very nice. It is THAT that is making me annoyed with myself - the letting the team down - more than anything else.

To confirm, we are meeting at 2, not 3 like usual (fine by me)?

The reason I asked about what I should do is simply because I don't want to end up doing something someone else already plans to do.

I will aim to work on the web interface + java backend from 12:45 until the meeting, and possibly through the meeting too. Just be aware that it isn't brilliantly easy, so I may not have got very far.

See you at 2, hopefully with me having something to give this time.

Scott.

It's all fair and well that you're acknowledging that you're letting the team down; but what would be really proactive is to, as you say, work on the web interface.

Me and James have been working on the java backend and you can find all our work in the dropbox repo.

Yeah, plan is to meet at 2, and just work until we finish the whole lot. We've got a week left on this and we haven't even touched testing, which is what me and James are both really worried about.

Please do have something at 2; we'll find somewhere quiet where we can work collaboratively.

Dave
